contemplative beautiful sentiment, or one that letters had come to his address, and she

I often think each tottering form That limps along in life's decline, Once bore a heart as young, as warm, As full of idle faults as minel And each has had its dream of joy, Its own unequalled, pure remance; Commencing when the blushing boy First thrilled at lovely woman's glance.

And each could tell his tale of youth, Would think its scenes of love evince More passions, more unearthly truth, Than any tale before or since. Yes, they could tell of tender lays At midnight penned in classic shades, Of days more bright than modern days-

Of whispers in a willing ear; Of kisses on a blushing cheek; Each kiss, each whisper far too dear Our modern lips to give or speak. Of passions too untimely crossed; Of passions slighted or betrayed-Of kindred spirits early lost,

And buds that blossomed but to fade. Of beaming eyes and tresses gay, Elastic form and noble brow, And forms that have all passed away, And left them what we see them now.

And is it thus-is human love So very frail and light a thing? And must youth's brightest visions move Forever on time's restless wing. Must all the eyes that still are bright. And all the lips that talk of bliss,

And all the forms so fair to sight, Hereafter only come to this? Then what are all earth's treasures worth, If we at length must lose them thus-If all we value most on earth Ere long must fade away from us?

least disposed to make trouble in the society. Hence the sensation which was produced when the report circulated that he had used almost blasphemous language in speaking of that amiable fluential deacon declaring that "she sets a worse example than Satan!" The minister's wife, whose ear was in due time reached by the report, felt in a high degree incensed, and sent her husband to deal with the honest old man.

The latter was astonished when told "I never said so!" he solemnly averred. "You are quite positive that you
